

As researchers, we have great responsibilities that include making our findings relevant and accessible. Recent threats to higher education have highlighted cracks in our research infrastructure. The traditional model of chasing federal research dollars is no longer tenable. Yet, we are not proving nimble enough to pivot toward more a flexible and sustainable alternative. I am deeply invested in the mission of Temple University and involving our students and community in research. We must do more to support our research faculty and promote resilience. I hope to engage with other faculty and administrators to improve the ways we communicate, produce, and disseminate research.
